

5 Things To Avoid During Job Search During Market Down

1. Although there are many companies which are rescinding offers during market down, a significant majority of employers will not resort to this kind of action and will still hire college talent. Don't give up before you try and there are still some great job opportunities available.
2. Just because of bad news reported on companies that represent that industry, you should not take it as a whole picture and give up in entire industry. Do your homework on specific employers of interest and you may surprised where the career opportunities will surface.
3. Do not depend on "CNN", because the media often focus on reporting the negative even though positive things are still occurring every day.
4. Don't stay in your comfort zone. Even though it is easy to return home and find a comfortable daily routine, which encourage procrastination of job search process, refuse from hiding under the covers and feeding your fears. Always stay engaged in the process and position yourself. When the market turns around, you will be in the right place at the right time.